Cantor Colburn Attorney Daniel Drexler Elected as the President of the Connecticut Intellectual Property Law Association

Hartford, Conn.—Daniel F. Drexler, a partner at Cantor Colburn LLP in Hartford, has been elected president of the Connecticut Intellectual Property Law Association (CIPLA), for a year-long term.

“It’s an honor to have a leadership role in the thriving Connecticut intellectual property community.” said Mr. Drexler.

Mr. Drexler has been a patent attorney for ten years. He concentrates his practice on patent preparation and procurement, strategic intellectual property (IP) portfolio development, due diligence in IP acquisitions, and client counseling and risk assessment in the areas of patent noninfringement, invalidity, and right-to-practice. Mr. Drexler holds a Bachelor of Science in Civil and Environmental Engineering from Rutgers University’s College of Engineering and a law degree from Pace University School of Law.

CIPLA elected another Cantor Colburn attorney as its Program Chair: Ian J.S. Lodovice, an associate with the firm, will serve in that post for a year. Mr. Lodovice was a research scientist with Pfizer before joining Cantor Colburn. He holds a master’s degree in molecular genetics and a bachelor’s degree in microbiology from the University of Rhode Island, and a law degree from the University of Connecticut Law School.

The mission of the CIPLA is to promote a standard of ethics and professionalism among its members, to aid in the preservation of intellectual property rights and in the future development of patent and trademark and copyright laws, and to generally consider matters of common interest to the profession and of the public’s best interest.

Cantor Colburn LLP, the largest intellectual property boutique law firm in Connecticut, has longstanding ties with the CIPLA. Michael J. Rye, a litigation partner, is a past president and currently serves on the board of governors.
