Cantor Colburn LLP Kicks Off Its Workplace Campaign for the Arts

Hartford, Conn. -- Cantor Colburn LLP hosted a Workplace Campaign for the Arts in its Hartford office to raise money for the Greater Hartford Arts Council (GHAC). GHAC is a nonprofit organization that provides grant support to more than 150 arts and heritage organizations and raises awareness about their events, performances, and educational opportunities in the greater Hartford area.

"Cantor Colburn employees enjoy supporting the arts and taking advantage of everything Hartford has to offer," said Michael Cantor, Co-Managing Partner of Cantor Colburn LLP.

GHAC's Jane Penfield, Assistant Director of Workplace Giving, greeted and thanked Cantor Colburn employees for their support of the campaign. After making pledges, employees dipped their hands in paint and then onto a large board that read, "I Give a Helping Hand to the Arts." This created a new piece of art and a visual reminder that it takes support from many to fund the arts for the enjoyment and enrichment of all (pictured above).

Ryan Ratelle, Artistic Director at the Hartford Children's Theater, introduced three young performers Caleb Reynolds, Lauren Popillo and Samantha Bluth, who performed "I've Got No Strings" from their upcoming production of Geppetto & Son for the more than a hundred Cantor Colburn employees assembled.

"Every year when we invite the Greater Hartford Arts Council into our office, they bring with them performers from the diverse organizations they support," said Mr. Cantor. "The Arts Council makes it fun to support the arts."

This year's campaign message is "The arts keep you healthy – mind, body, and spirit." Cantor Colburn employees are proud to join others in keeping the arts healthy throughout the capital region. More information on how to become involved can be found at www.LetsGoArts.org.
